Patent Decisions

An unsuccessful defendant is not entitled to elect an accounting of profits to shield itself from an award of damages

Bayer Inc. v Cobalt Pharmaceuticals Company, 2016 FC 1192

On September 7, 2016, the Court held that Bayer's patent was valid and infringed (2016 FC 1013; our summary here). The parties were given an opportunity to make written submissions regarding Bayer's entitlement to elect between damages and an accounting of profits.

Apotex submitted that it should be entitled to make the election, and that Bayer should be restricted to an accounting of profits. The Court disagreed finding that the award of an equitable remedy, such as an accounting of profits, is at the Court's discretion, subject to the principles governing its availability. The Court noted that an unsuccessful defendant cannot invoke the Court's equitable jurisdiction to shield itself from an award of damages. Rather, at most, an unsuccessful defendant may oppose the grant of an equitable remedy based on considerations that have been recognized in the jurisprudence.

Bayer was entitled to damages and the parties agreed that an accounting of profits may also be an appropriate remedy. Therefore, the Court held that Bayer may elect between damages and an accounting of profits following discovery.

Appeal relating to double patenting and sufficiency of tadalafil patent dismissed Apotex Inc. v. Eli Lilly Canada Inc., 2016 FCA 267

The Federal Court of Appeal considered an appeal from Apotex relating to double patenting and insufficiency of a patent claiming the use of tadalafil to treat erectile dysfunction. The Court of Appeal had previously considered the issue of double patenting of this patent with a different generic company, Mylan (2016 FCA 119; our summary here). The Court of Appeal dismissed Apotex's argument that the Mylan case was wrongly decided, and did not accept Apotex's arguments relating to insufficiency. The appeal was dismissed with costs.
