In her practice, Rose Massicotte represents the interests of businesses of all sizes, both unionized and non-unionized, and she handles all aspects of labour and employment law. In particular, she advises employers with respect to pre-hiring and hiring procedures, employee management, dismissals, individual and group layoffs, and human rights, as well as labour relations.

Rose completed her civil law and common law studies at McGill University. She was first hired by BLG as a student in 2015, then completed her articling period with the firm before joining our Labour and Employment Law Group.

Experience

- Advises employers on labour and employment law issues
- Drafts, reviews and updates corporate policies, employment and services contracts, as well as confidentiality, non-solicitation and non-competition clauses
- Supports colleagues and acts in disputes before civil courts, administrative tribunals and arbitration boards
- Provides training sessions to businesses and their employees on various aspects of labour and employment law
