Amy has a broad practice focused on commercial and civil litigation and arbitration.

She regularly advocates for clients in a range of commercial disputes, including contract and tort disputes, and banking and fraud litigation.

Amy works with a variety of clients, ranging from energy and power organizations to banking institutions.

She is an emerging author on risk and liability issues, including contributing to legal insights regarding recent developments in global health risks.

Amy joined BLG as an associate after summering and articling with the firm. During law school, she was a member of the executive team for the Business Law Association of Dalhousie and the Domus Legis Society.
