Chloe is a law student in the Montréal office. She has a particular interest in privacy, data protection, cybersecurity and AI.

After completing her master's degree, Chloe gained invaluable experience as a junior consultant with the International Organisation for Migration (UN). Working closely with refugees, internally displaced persons, and migrants affected by conflict enhanced her ability to navigate global legal frameworks with confidence.

After her first year of law school at McGill University, Chloe completed an internship within Juripop's domestic and post-separation violence team, where she had the opportunity to conduct thorough legal research and refine her proficiency in developing strategic solutions for complex and sensitive cases.
